"Fall down seven times get up eight"

When I was involved in high level sport, I was always told by my coach to "leave nothing on the field".

What does this mean? It means that you have given 100%.....everything, you could not have tried any harder, and you can look at yourself and say I did my best.

The Japanese have a great saying....."Fall down seven times get up eight"

This saying expresses the idea of sticking with a task with tenacity until it is completed; of making a persistent effort until success is achieved. Use this saying every day to encourage others to "do your best" in work; to "fight on!" and "never give up!" during a sporting event or when studying for an exam. You do not always have to win, but you must never give up.

The best kind of motivation is intrinsic motivation. For the benefit of oneself — and for the benefit of others as well — one must bear down and do their best. Even in good times, behaving uncooperatively or in a rude manner is deeply frowned upon. In a crisis, the idea of complaining or acting selfishly to the detriment of those around you is the absolute worst thing a person can do. There is no sense in complaining about how things are or crying over what might have been. These feelings may be natural to some degree, but they are not productive for yourself or for others. Never give up.

John.

Black History Assembly

Today's black history assembly was outstanding as always. Our students focused on various black people around the world who had made an impact in society from Rosa Parks to Funmilayo Ransom Kuti, and they went to town sharing inspirational stories about these powerful people.

Our scientists also received awards at the achievers assemblies these week and as usual, there were musical recitals by Henriette, Paris and Tamilore.

Head Teacher Interview

From the Directors

Update on Head teacher Recruitment.

After a rigorous search and down from a long list of 13 candidates to a short list of 7, we are now down to two final candidates.

The first of our two final candidates came in this week and had interview sessions with The Extended Leadership Team, The Students Council, The Executive Committee of the PTA and The Directors.

Thank you all for making out time to attend.

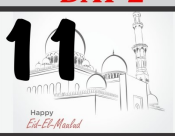

The second candidate will be interviewed on Wednesday of next week.

Please make it a date.
